

ANNIHILATES FLAME BY NEW PINK POWDER

Maine Inventor Gives Demonstration of Compound for Officials of District.

A remarkable fire-extinguishing exhibition was given in the yard in the rear of the headquarters of No. 3 Engine company today by E. W. Hanks, inventor of a pink powder which annihilates flames. A group of fascinated spectators agreed that Hanks' preparation is successful. His demonstrations were varied, and the tests to which he put his powder were most severe.

The inventor, who is a superintendent of the fire department, applied his powder to seven kinds of fire and extinguished each of them instantly. A general fire in a piano box was first put out, then the powder extinguished an open, grass, and acetylene gas fire. Hanks says his powder extinguishes flames by making them 100 per cent hotter, thus forming a gas which destroys the oxygen and smothers the fire like a blanket.

Today's demonstrations were witnessed by George A. Bentley, chief clerk of the District of Columbia, and the preparation would be invaluable in fighting forest fires; Lieut. E. W. Watson and W. W. Harts; Frank B. Lord, president of the National Press Club; Frank Nicholson, District Fire Marshal; and a large number of firemen, all of whom said the pink powder surpassed any they had ever seen.
